Is Mrs. Walter Frum, of Simpson's Creek, When Her Hair Catches on a Shaft.

Mrs. Walter Frum, of Simpson's creek, about five miles below Bridgeport, is a patient in St. Mary's hospital receiving treatment for injuries she received Monday morning when her hair caught on a shaft of a gasoline engine and a large part of the scalp was torn off her head. She is resting easy today and while her injuries are not of a fatal nature they are painful and she will be several months recovering.

Mr. Frum was starting to do the family washing with a washing machine operated by a gasoline engine, and when she went to throw a belt on a pulley to start the machine, her hair caught on the shaft or pulley and the scalp was torn off. Mrs. M. E. Lawson, a relative, was the first to reach Mrs. Frum following the accident.

A local physician was called and she was rushed to the hospital where the scalp was put back on the head, but it is doubtful if it will grow fast. It does not skin will have to be grafted on the top of her head.

HUGHES CLUB HAS A STREET PARADE

Campaign Officers Are Visited and They Respond with Brief Speeches.

A large turnout of members of the Harrison County Hughes Republican Club ended the campaign here Monday night in a very fitting manner. After assembling at the club rooms, they marched with a band to Republican state headquarters in Glen Elk, where they paid their respects to Charles G. Coffman, secretary of the Republican state committee, and others, who had done faithful work throughout the campaign. Mr. Coffman responded in a brief but enthusiastic speech.

The members then proceeded to Telegram Square, where they called National Committeeman Virgil L. disbanding.

Highland from the Empire National Bank. He was escorted to an automobile, from which he made a short but earnest talk, assuring them that the state fight was won and thanking them for their co-operation. Mayor G. H. Gordon then spoke, introducing Harry C. Hoffman, president of the club, who made a brief address.

Proceeding from that point, the marchers went to court house square where Ira L. Swiger and Will E. Morris made enthusiastic talks.

The latter provoked great applause when he told his auditors that they had their fighting clothes on and that he had felt the last two or three days like doing a little fighting himself. He scathingly denounced his political detractors.

The members of the club then went to the club rooms, where the parade

WILL TEST WEST VIRGINIA DRY LAW

Reargument to Begin Wednesday in Supreme Court; Cumberland Company Sues.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—Election activities are affecting in some measure this week's work of the supreme court. Few important cases are on the docket for argument during the week, several having been passed because attorneys desired to remain at home for the election period.

The court will be in session as usual on election day, but one or two of the justices having residences within easy reach of Washington may go home to vote. In past years few of the justices have attempted to vote, most of them coming from too far distant states.

Among the more important cases to be argued this week are those testing the constitutionality of federal and state liquor legislation—the Webb-Kenyon act of Congress and the West Virginia prohibition law. These cases probably will be reached Wednesday. They were argued in May, 1915, but the court reached no decision and reargument was ordered.

Whether the Webb-Kenyon law, passed in 1913 to give dry states the right to prevent shipment of liquor across their borders from other states, is constitutional is raised directly in suits of the James Clark Distilling Company, of Cumberland, Md., against the Western Maryland railway for an injunction to require the railroad to carry liquor ordered for individual use of West Virginians. The West Virginia prohibition law of 1913, known as the Yost law as later amended, prohibits the manufacture, use, sale or possession, except for medicinal, scientific and other similar purposes, of liquor. It also prohibits solicitation by liquor dealers through the mails. A similar case is pending before the court affecting North Carolina dry statutes.

VENTILATION IS NEEDED IN ALL SCHOOL ROOMS

Official of Health Department Shows How Pupils May Be Benefited.

CHARLESTON, Nov. 7.—Practical ventilation means air movement rather than the introduction of new air from outdoors, according to Dr. H. B. Wood, assistant state commissioner of health, in his advice to school boards, though under the conditions usually met in school rooms a maximum amount of fresh air is needed.

He also declared that teaching personal cleanliness to the children and their mothers decreased the need of fresh air introduction into the class rooms.

"The children should be impressed with the advantage of ventilation and fresh air, that they may serve to regenerate their homes and decrease the prevalence of respiratory diseases of the state. A well ventilated house and a well ventilated school mean better health, less sickness and increased efficiency.

Fresh Air Class Rooms.
"Fresh air" class rooms should be developed in West Virginia. In these rooms the windows are kept wide open throughout the year and the children are properly clothed to withstand the temperature; a heating system is not necessary. The windows are closed only to keep the rain or snow from wetting the floor or damaging the furniture. The results of fresh-air rooms are marked by increasing the health and efficiency of the children and by the accomplishment of more work.

"The question of ventilation of rural school houses equipped with stoves which stand in the center of the room is frequently asked. These stoves situated within the room can be used to produce an efficient air flow and mixing of the room air if properly equipped with jackets. The jackets of a stove should extend from near the floor to above the top of the stove and be placed about six to twelve inches from it.

"If the room can be equipped to receive air from the outside, a duct should lead from the bottom of the jacket out doors leading under the floor at the stove, if convenient. The duct should be supplied with a damper to close during the coldest weather.

Defines Proper Jacket.
"When the stove is supplied with the fresh air duct, or nearly so, in the absence of the air the jacket should have an opening around the base of at least six inches, the jacket being supported upon iron legs.

"In either case the jacket should not completely encircle the stove, but should enclose all except the front, and at the sides of the doors the jacket should be bent in toward the stove and made to form a tight joint with and stove throughout its entire height.

"This arrangement provides for a complete circulation of the air in the room, entering the jacket at the base, getting warmed and flowing out at the top. By carefully following this construction the school board will obtain a school room more equably and more efficiently heated."
